

forging history

by Dale Montagne

The bronze life-sized sculpture depicts the expansion the railroad brought to the United States and especially Palestine, Texas. Through the action and motion of the figure, Montagne has illustrated the hard work it took to build the railroad. The base represents the varied landscapes and locations of the countryside. Palestine is depicted with its trees and depot. The rail surrounding the middle of the sculpture and his action of splitting the rail is the conquering of the countryside making way for commerce and travel. The rail construction in 1872 through Palestine linked many rail lines resulting in economic growth. The movement of the man represents the many men and women who worked for the railroad.
